

What is Teleaudiology?

The following information is general. For information about how teleaudiology might work for you, talk to a hearing care professional.

Teleaudiology can be a useful way to access hearing care – for yourself or someone you care for.

It involves connecting with a hearing care professional in another location by video call, phone call, email or an App.

You can expect the same high quality hearing care from teleaudiology as you get at an in-person appointment.

Most hearing care can be provided by teleaudiology, including adjusting a hearing device, counselling or managing tinnitus and other hearing disorders.

Teleaudiology makes it easier to access hearing support and is often used by people who:

- live a long way from a hearing clinic;
- find it difficult to book appointments due to family or work commitments;
- have health or mobility issues

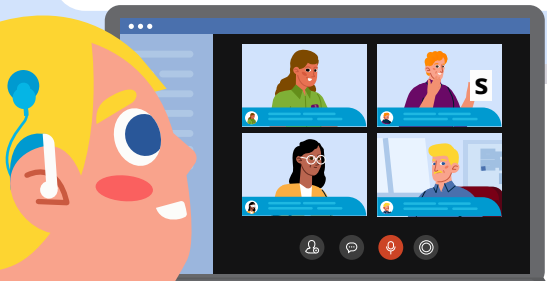

With Teleaudiology, you can access hearing support when you need it - at home, work, or any quiet place with a stable internet connection.

Your hearing health care provider will talk to you about what is possible using your existing devices.

Video calls are ideal. They allow everyone to see each other, making it easier to build a relationship.

Teleaudiology allows you to bring others to your appointment, such as family members, other specialists, or interpreters, wherever they are – at work or on the other side of the country.
